Dunbar, of St. John, his agent for the sale of his buggy, planter, chopper and cultivator, a machine which, in the judgment of experienced planters, is now absolutely necessary to the cultivation of cotton, in view of the general unreliability of labor. The farmer who plants and cultivates cotton with this machine, can do so to the extent of two hundred acres with one hand and two mules, and much better than he can with twenty hands and twelve mules.

Mr. Dunbar has one of the machines now on exhibition, and will be happy to explain its uses and economy to all who favor him with a call.
